We can stop in front of the roots of this leadership at various stages to monitor several parameters do not miss it appointed in that the UAE trip, comes in the forefront of the human UAE was and still is one of the most important enablers of sustainable excellence, but publicly all we still remember what you prefer, by His Highness Sheikh Mohammed bin Rashid Al Maktoum, UAE Vice President, Prime Minister and Ruler of Dubai (Amir), during the panel discussion in government summit in 2013, when brought deep of the importance of rights in our nation when he said: "We are a small country in size, great their men, strong achievements, the most expensive meaning What we have is a human." For this Emirates occupied the leading position in the knowledge economy and investment in human capital and initiatives related to education, rehabilitation, training and employment and empowerment of human industry to be issued in the national agenda,

The Emirates in-depth reading of the 2021 Economic Vision and Vision 2030 as well as the national agenda reflect that investment in human capital (citizen) and enable the human being is the backbone of sustainable development and the knowledge-based economy.

Driving When You Are Taking Medications

Some Individuals suffering from chronic or non-chronic, which should know taking some medicines which may affect the leadership of their vehicles after taking the drugs, especially that increase drowsiness, has urged doctors need to read the medication prospectus to see complications and side effects, in order to avoid its effects, noting that driving the vehicle immediately after taking certain medications may cause traffic accidents.

And cause antihistamines and pain, insomnia, anxiety and depression in negative effects, most notably dizziness, fatigue, sleepiness, increasing the chance of accidents.

Doctors advised to stand on the complications of medications, and review of the hospital in case of increase, especially in patients who consume constantly and drive their vehicles on the roads.

The factors that may cause the increased reaction time of the vehicle driver is in fatigue and poor mental state and age, note that the leadership under one of these factors increase the likelihood of traffic accidents, and the resulting ones of loss of life and property.

And it must be on the vehicle commander in the event of his sense of loss of focus, that the ease and speed secure additional space around the vehicle, to compensate for the sluggish reaction.

Note that the antidepressants, sedatives and drugs that contain «codeine», and prescribed drugs to treat anxiety and cold, allergies and pain relievers and diet, is the most dangerous drivers.

Teenage and dream of driving

Many parents remain shockingly clueless about the magnitude of the risk for teen drivers. They give in much too easily to pressure from teens to obtain a driver's license on or near their 16th birthday.

Likewise, many allow their kids to breeze through the perfunctory steps that pass for driving instruction in this country, then blithely hand over the keys to the family vehicle, or buy one for their young driver right away—often something flashy, top-heavy or too powerful. What is so puzzling is how strongly this situation counters typical parental behavior for the first 16 years of a child's life.

During that time parents eagerly spring for all kinds of instruction: piano lessons, dancing lessons, skating lessons and so forth. They cart the kids endlessly back and forth to such sessions, spending hundreds of hours and lots of money. No parent would pay for only six piano lessons and then expect a child to perform at a concert. And no parent would send a child to six swimming lessons then demand a championship athletic performance.

So why is it, when it counts the most—when it becomes a matter of life and death—that so many parents shrink from their responsibility to instruct, supervise and protect their children? Why do they settle for only six hours of driver training behind the wheel? Most states have at least imposed graduated licensing programs, which strengthen some of the requirements for beginning drivers—and have resulted in decreased fatality rates—but those laws go only so far.

Given the situation and the dangers, responsible parents have no choice. They must do for their beginning drivers what they have done during earlier phases of their children's development.

They must assume responsibility to supervise a safe and complete driving instruction program.

First, take Control

All states grant parents authority to decide whether their minor child should obtain a learner's permit and a license. If a parent thinks a teen is not yet ready, then that parent need do nothing—granting a permit or a license is what requires action, in the form of a signature. You know your teen better than anyone (At least you hope you do!), and it is up to you to decide when he or she is ready and how you are going to approach the process.

Take the time

Safety experts agree good basic driving skills require at least 100 hours of supervised instruction behind the wheel. That means gradually exposing kids to as many of the potential conditions they will face on the road as possible. For both of your sakes, begin in a place of safety, such as an empty parking lot, and move carefully from there into conditions of increasing complexity—but only after the teen has mastered each new skill and challenge.

Don't hurry

There is no specific age at which he or she must begin driving. Forget about your own inconvenience and concentrate on teaching. If at any time you feel a sense of inattention, resistance or rebellion, become the parent again.

Say something like: "I'm sorry, but you're not taking this as seriously as I would have hoped, so we're going to suspend the lessons until you start showing a better attitude." Likewise, don't give up until you are comfortable being in the passenger seat all the time.

Even after your teen is licensed, instruction should continue. Lay down sensible limits, such as no passengers for the first three months, curfews, and absolutely no drinking or drugs. Make it a point, whenever you and your teen travel together, to require him or her to drive. It's a good way to continue to sharpen skills and detect bad habits.

And remember that until your child reaches age 18, you still have the authority to suspend or revoke driving privileges.

Last, enjoy this

This approach is not punitive—it's loving and caring. It conveys how much you desire to see your child receive the best training possible.-

Speed and road accidents

Know excessive speed as those that increase the speed specified by the speed and described Bashakhsat traffic. Speeding is thought of as bad conduct on part of some drivers who are not committed to traffic rules which lead to endangering the lives of all road users at risk. Excessive speed is also linked to serious traffic offenses such as not leaving enough distance between cars, and non-compliance itinerary, «and crossing red signals» and to the inability of the driver of the vehicle to stop in time when you change the optical signals due to excessive speed, leading to the occurrence of irregularities and dangerous accidents. Thus, excess speed is the biggest cause of death for road accidents.

Did you know that: - * the possibility of involvement in the death of an accident doubles twice with increased speed of 5 km per hour above the speed limit. Vulnerabilities in an over speed: - * Increase the likelihood of accidents as a result of tight enough time to take the appropriate decision to avoid the risk of the driver's way in case of any emergency. * Increase the likelihood of collisions as a result of not leaving enough distance between the vehicle and other vehicles. * Loss of control and lack of poise vehicle. * Increase the likelihood of accidents as a result of not being able to control the vehicle in case of emergency situations such as the explosion of the frame. * Increase the likelihood of accidents as a result of the inability to avoid the mistakes of others. * Increased speed lead to increased severity of the collision, and thus increase the likelihood of death or bodily injury.
